Building Capacities for Change

- Widespread Government Interest in Capacity-Building
- The Report Explores how to:
 - Identify "core capacities" to manage migration.
 - Optimize linkages in global labour demand/supply.
 - Strengthen and expand migration management systems.
 - Mobilize the resources required.

Building Capacities for Change: WHICH CAPACITIES?

Required Capacities:

- To develop timely, accurate migration data;
- To define national migration policy goals;
- To train migration officials;
- To construct effective legal frameworks;
- To establish optimum administrative structures;
- To ensure adequate financing.

For 6 Priority Areas:

- Labour migration
- Irregular migration
- Migration and development
- Integration
- Environmental change
- Migration governance

Building Capacities for Change: IOM TOOLS

Some Examples:

- 1. The African Capacity-Building Centre, Moshi, Tanzania
- 2. Migration Research and Training Centre, Korea.
- 3. Migration Profiles (35 countries)
- 4. ACP Migration Observatory (12 pilot countries)
- GMG Handbook (Mainstreaming Migration into Development Planning)
- 6. 1035 Facility (capacity support to developing IOM Member States)

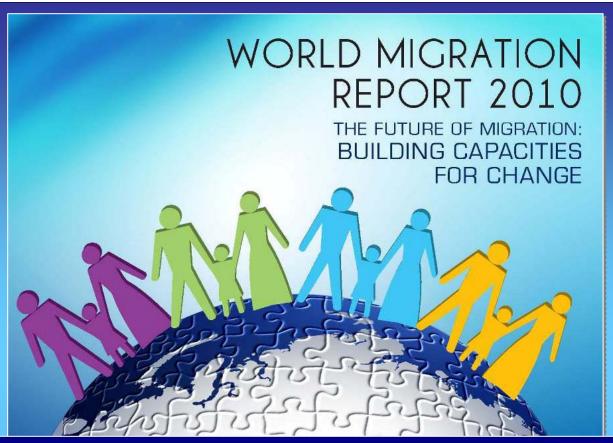

Recommendations

- 1. More comprehensive, coherent approach to capacity-building.
- 2. Regular surveys and assessments of current and anticipated capacity-building requirements.
- 3. Assessment of "what works" and "what doesn't work," and impact of capacity-building programmes.
- 4. Technical know-how and operational skills (as important as financial resources) in managing migration.

Conclusions

- 1. Global attention to migration often not matched by capacity.
- 2. Governments thus often unable to benefit from migration or to avoid migration's negative aspects.
- 3. Early action needed to enhance capacities to level of migration challenges.
- 4. Stronger partnerships required between countries of origin, transit and destination.
