Migration Context: Mosul

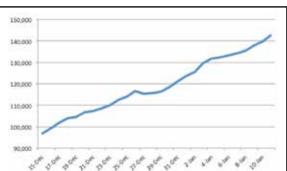

As of 11 January 2017, 142,698 persons (23,783 families) were displaced by Mosul military operations, which is 47% more than on December 15

The majority of the displaced persons, 87% (125,034) are in camps and emergency sites. During the reporting period the overall population in camps and emergency sites grew by 53% (from 81,756 on 15 December to 125,034 on 11 January).

As of 11 January 2017, the governorate hosting the largest number of IDPs displaced as a result of Mosul operations is still Ninewa, with 98% of IDPs (139,386 individuals).

Qayara Airstrip emergency site now hosts 2,697 displaced families (15,931 individuals) from Mosul and Hatra districts, Ninewa; Hawija Kirkuk; district, Al-Shirgat and district, Salah al-More than Din. 350 families are taking shelter in rubhalls until tents are ready.

The sub-districts that recorded the highest increase during the past week are Merkaz Al-Hamdaniya (4,236 individuals), Merkaz Al-Shikhan (3,708 individuals), and Al Qayara (2,826 individuals).

The increase in Al-Hamdaniya sub-district is due to the large number of new arrivals to Khazer M1 camp, whose IDP population grew by 15% last week (5,016 individuals).

Voices of Displacement

Abu Hussein

Abu Hussein is not married yet. But he has a fiancé, who also escaped from Mosul with her family. although they live in different camps for displaced Iragis to the east of Mosul.

"Life under ISIL was terrible. There was absolutely no work. We wanted to run away, but they would not allow anyone to leave so they could use us as human shields. Whenever they were under pressure and wanted to pull back from an area they forced the population to go with them. If someone refused, they threatened to kill them. They would say 'Why don't you want to leave with us? Are you happier to be with the apostates and infidels? Or maybe you are a spy and you want to go back to them?"

Abu Hussein fled Mosul with some of the stronger members of his family, those who could endure the long journey and the cold and rainy weather at night. They walked for more than 20 kilometers to get out of ISIL-held territory.

"All of the suffering under ISIL, what we have been through trying to escape, and having to live under a tent in an IDP camp, does not hurt me as much as hearing people say 'the people of Mosul are all ISIL supporters.' We were facing a force much stronger than ourselves, what could we have done?"

"We are very tired and very upset. The beautiful city of Mosul, the city of prophets, has turned into the city of ghosts under ISIL. I have so much to tell you about what we have seen that you will run out of notebook pages and I will run out of breath."
