1.1 Introduction: Migration

- Migration: 191 million migrants worldwide and
- 24.5 million internally displaced persons (IDPs) (2007)

- In Moldova, the total number of emigrants grew from fewer than 100,000 in 1999 to more than 350,000 by the end of 2006. The total number of labor emigrants is estimated at around 345,000 (IOM’s survey), amounting to one quarter of total labour force

- Driving forces:
  - Pull factors
  - Push factors
  - Inter-country networks
1.2 Introduction: Remittances

- Migrant remittances are defined broadly as monetary transfers that a migrant makes to the country of origin, i.e. financial flows associated with migration.

- US $ 300 billion in remittances worldwide (IFAD, IBD). In Moldova, remittances reached US $ 1.2 billion in 2007 (NBM); ratio to GDP - 36 %, one of the highest

- Forms:
  - Cash transfers from migrant workers or immigrants to recipients in home country
  - Monetary investments, deposits, or donations by the migrant in the country of origin
  - In-kind personal transfers and donations
2. Remittances: an Overview

- Remittances are the largest source of external finance for the developing countries.

- Remittances to developing countries have grown from U.S. $2.98 billion in 1975 to over $300 billion in 2007. Their true size, is believed to be even larger.

- Remittances are larger than FDI and more than twice as large as official aid received by developing countries.

- Remittances exceed 10% of GDP in 22 developing countries, capital flows in 36 developing countries; merchandise exports in 12 countries; and the largest single commodity exports in 28 countries.

- In Moldova, remittances have exceeded merchandise exports (NBM, 2007, QII).
Migration: Impact on Development

Developmental dimensions of Migration:

- Migration is an essential, inevitable and a complex historical phenomenon
- Orderly and humane migration can benefit all stakeholders, whereas irregular migration is a development retarding
- Governments can and must manage migration through national policy and international co-operation
- Consensus that migration is an integral part of the development process
- Though, migration can not be a full substitute for development, but it can contribute to the development process
3.1 Migration: Impact on Development

Positives:

- Economic gain - remittances, investment etc.
- Labor market and employment opportunities abroad (enhanced mobility of labor force)
- Migration can empower women/other groups
- Impacts on social institutions - origin & destination countries
- Migrants as development agents (human, social capital, skills, fostering innovation, progress and advancement)
- Diaspora as a source for economic and social development
- Return (brain circulation) can maximize developmental impacts of migration by transfer of skills
- Equalizing effects on income of origin countries
Case of Moldova: Migration has reduced poverty by raising salaries and increasing incomes through remittances.
Negative impact of migration on development

• Brain-drain (loss of human capital, including highly qualified specialists);
• Social: torn families, children left behind, weakening the social protection system
• Inflation impact on economy/pressure on currency exchange rate
• Increased inequality/disparity in incomes
• Creation of a “tradition of migration”
• Irregular migration harms inter-state relations

Remedy: a comprehensive migration policy needed at the national level, supported by appropriate legislations and implementing mechanisms
3.2 Remittances: Impact on development

• The effect of remittances on development remains a widely debated issue:
  – Negative view: create dependency, wealth disparities, currency appreciation, inflation, displace local jobs, higher import content of consumption, encourage further migration and may cause labour shortages.
  – Positive view: foster poverty alleviation in countries of origin, increase productivity and investments, promote economic development, augment national savings, ease foreign exchange constraints.

• Remittances alone do not lead to development and economic growth, and their impact depends on micro- and macro-level factors of the economies of host and home countries.

  – Therefore, migration cannot be considered to be a universal solution for addressing all developmental problems.

Main policy directions of the Government:

• To create effective mechanisms for management and monitoring of migration flows
• To improve the reliability of migration and remittance data and the capacity of the government to collect, share and apply such data
• To improve the knowledge and capacity of migrant workers and their families to channel and use their remittances for productive investments
• To improve the linkages of the Government with its Diaspora
• To improve remuneration of labour and a continued increase of state guaranties in this area
• To promote return migration and reintegration programs
• To create an enabling environment for SME growth
• To promote mobility of labour force/circular migration
