Convinced that migration is an historical human movement that has its motivations, the organization of which can be beneficial to all parties, realize that the essential reasons for migration, especially from Africa, lies in poverty, environmental degradation, and the lack of development, and that illegal migration flows are directed towards the developed countries, so that every country has become either a country of origin, transit or destination, or or a combination of all three .

Recalling the global approach to migration and the need to address, in the framework of this meeting, specifically the phenomenon of illegal immigration, the Ministers affirm that the emergence and the deterioration of the illegal immigration phenomenon has caused several problems both in the countries of transit and destination.

Illegal migration flows and the risk of exploitation of migrants by terrorist groups and organized crime could have serious consequences on regional and international security and stability.

Recognising that illegal immigration can never be handled by security measures alone. Such measures should be complemented by development strategies for the creation of development projects, labour, production and service opportunities in the countries of origin in order to encourage migrants to remain in their home countries. All this can only be achieved through synergies between national, regional and international efforts. In this vein, the present dialogue and Partnerships between the EU and Africa constitute an example.

Acknowledging that an increase in illegal migration operations causes difficulties and negative repercussions on the States of the Dialogue. .

The meeting emphasizes the importance of identifying concrete and tangible projects especially with the EU in order to effectively contribute to the development of Africa in general and to enhance the capacity of African countries to better manage migratory flows, in order to achieve development, as well as to strengthen actions by the countries of origin and transit in order to fight illegal immigration and organized crime involved in human trafficking.

Recognising the need to work together in a spirit of mutual partnership for the better management of migration in a comprehensive and global manner that takes into account the priorities of the countries in question. Ministers responsible for migration in the western Mediterranean dialogue countries agreed on the following:

- Reaffirm the need for a global and shared approach to migration as a effective development tool and agree that legal migration can have positive effects on both countries of origin and transit through migrants' contributions.

programs aiming at combating illegal immigration to avoid any difficulties arising from the implementation of those plans and programs.

- Cooperating in the implementation of media campaigns targeted at potential migrants informing them about the actual job opportunities in the destination countries. Use of the available media to raise awareness on the risks of illegal immigration. These initiatives will target local people and youth in particular in those areas where there is a significant level of migration. , These media campaigns will be conducted in cooperation with EU institutions and the relevant international organizations.

Exploring practical and effective means that would reinforce the institutional, human and technical capacities, as well as the equipment needed for border control and surveillance.
