Global pilot study reveals films counter xenophobia and misinformation about migrants

The DISC project is a global initiative led by the UN Migration Agency, IOM, and the Global Movement for Fairness and Inclusion (GMFF). It aims to reduce xenophobia and promote social cohesion.

The global pilot study, conducted in 20 countries, found that films can effectively counter xenophobia and misinformation about migrants. The study revealed that films can help to create a more inclusive society by promoting understanding and empathy.

The DISC project is currently launching its latest initiative, a digital platform that will provide tools and resources to help promote social cohesion and reduce xenophobia.

Launch of the DISC Online Platform on Xenophobia

The DISC project is a global initiative that seeks to reduce xenophobia and promote social cohesion. It is led by the UN Migration Agency, IOM, and the Global Movement for Fairness and Inclusion (GMFF).

The project has launched a new digital platform that will provide resources to help combat xenophobia. The platform includes films, videos, and interactive tools that can be used to promote social cohesion and reduce xenophobia.

The platform will be available on the DISC website and will be accessible to anyone interested in combating xenophobia.

About the DISC initiative

The DISC initiative is a global project aimed at reducing xenophobia and promoting social cohesion. It is led by the UN Migration Agency, IOM, and the Global Movement for Fairness and Inclusion (GMFF).

The initiative includes a range of activities, such as film screenings, workshops, and training sessions, that aim to promote social cohesion and reduce xenophobia.

The initiative is open to anyone interested in combating xenophobia and promoting social cohesion.

How can you get involved?

The DISC initiative is open to anyone interested in reducing xenophobia and promoting social cohesion. To get involved, you can sign up for the initiative and receive updates on its activities.

You can also support the initiative by sharing its resources and spreading the word about its goals.

For more information, visit the DISC website or contact the initiative at disc@iom.int.